

Infection control advice during Ramadan

Ramadan Mubarak! Today, Tuesday 13 April, Ramadan begins, and many Muslims are now entering a period of fasting. In this article, you will find links to important advice about infection control, including information about vaccines.

We know it is a tradition to gather with family and friends during the holidays. Unfortunately, this cannot be done this year. It is not allowed to have more than two guests at home.

If we want to meet, it must be done digitally. The same goes for other events.

It is important that everyone follows the infection control advice and rules that apply so that everyone who celebrates Ramadan has a safe and good holiday, and so that we do not increase the infection.

Ramadan and vaccines

Muslimsk Dialognettverk and Islamic Council Norway now state that the vaccine can be taken during fasting, so everyone who is offered a vaccine in the upcoming month can attend the vaccination as normal.

At the Norwegian Institute of Public Health, they have gathered infection control advice for Ramadan here:

We wish all Muslims in Kristiansand a peaceful and safe Ramadan.
